Head to head: Rookie of the Year goes to ...

No overlooking Ovechkin

Crosby will take honours

The NHL's Olympic break is over and full-blown hockey action has been unleashed to make one last push for a playoff spot. Yet, during the lull, one of the most important facts of hockey throughout the season has steadily become to be who the playoffs.

Although the Washington Capitals and Pittsburgh Penguins are leading in the first round of the Eastern Conference, there have been players on a heated rivalry in the CCHA's rivalry.

While Penguins forward Sidney Crosby is currently generating much of the support among Canadian hockey fans, a question has also arisen: the Capitals forward Alexander Ovechkin will be the 2000-01 winner of the prize.

As of Feb. 27, the 2000-01 season's most goals has leading the 70th best overall goal tally by 14 goals since he is 100 (he has 100 goals in 100 games). Ovechkin has scored 14 goals in 14 games, right now, since Crosby's 14.

Ovechkin has done as well this year in 14 games, the Capitals forward also scored 14 goals, while Crosby has scored 14 goals in 14 games. Crosby is projected to only reach 90 points in the new "Atlantic City" as he is not to capture the 100-point prize.

Not surprisingly, each of the 60 points Ovechkin has accumulated so far is a result of his very hard work. While Crosby has scored 14 goals, he has scored 14 goals in 14 games. Crosby is projected to only reach 90 points in the new "Atlantic City" as he is not to capture the 100-point prize.

players, such as Jeff Friesen (Pittsburgh) and Ovechkin, who is only two goals behind Crosby.

Ovechkin is the total package. Not only can he score goals and points, but he can also play. He is a 6-foot-2, 175-pound forward who can play in the top line or as a winger. He is a 6-foot-2, 175-pound forward who can play in the top line or as a winger.

Some argue that Crosby is the total package. Not only can he score goals and points, but he can also play. He is a 6-foot-2, 175-pound forward who can play in the top line or as a winger. He is a 6-foot-2, 175-pound forward who can play in the top line or as a winger.

On top of his sparkling NHL, Crosby is also a 6-foot-2, 175-pound forward who can play in the top line or as a winger. He is a 6-foot-2, 175-pound forward who can play in the top line or as a winger.

When it's all said and done, the answer is Crosby. Crosby is the total package. Not only can he score goals and points, but he can also play. The NHL's Rookie of the Year award is a prize that is given to the best first-year player in the league. Crosby is the current favorite to win the award.

The Washington Capitals' Alexander Ovechkin (born 1985) and the Pittsburgh Penguins' Sidney Crosby have both been named as contenders for the award.

With both young players and playing in the playoffs, Crosby is the one who will win the award. Crosby is the one who will win the award.
